

A CASE STUDY

Understanding the Use of a Drug in Infectious Fungal Disease (IFD) Management

U.S.-based Survey for Insight into Improvements in Excipients

CHALLENGE

An Indian pharmaceutical company wanted to develop a case for how other excipients can enhance absorption and reduce side effects of a certain medication. They sought to achieve this by understanding how IFD is managed for groups of patients with specific medical conditions.

THE GLG APPROACH

GLG facilitated a survey of 20 key opinion leaders in the U.S. about managing IFD in specific groups of patients. Seven oncologists, seven IFD specialists, and six hematologists were invited to share their insights on the use, benefits, and gaps of prescribing the drug.

OUTCOME

The experts' insights helped the client better understand the reasons behind their preference in prescribing the antifungal medication. The synthesized report also highlighted nuances surrounding excipients, which the client used to develop a case for how other excipients can help enhance absorption and reduce side effects.
